Enough Evidence to Convict?

by Doug Kashorek

Your reputation precedes you. That can be either good or bad, depending on how you've been known and how you've previously conducted yourself. But, even though Jesus from age twelve "increased in wisdom and in stature and in favor with God and man," He still had a difficult time being accepted in His hometown when began His public ministry.

I discovered this when I began to preach full-time at the church where I had been known for the previous five years as a new Christian and an English teacher. It was much easier being accepted in the preacher's role here at 36th Street after twenty-three years of ministry in another place. But that too was all part of the reputation that preceded me.

Some may have Jesus' hometown problem if your neighbors, friends, and even your brothers and sisters in Christ have known you since you were young. Timothy, whose faith was instilled in him by his mother and grandmother, may also have had that struggle in his work in Ephesus because Paul told him, "Let no one despise you for your youth, but set the believers an example in speech, in conduct, in love, in faith, in purity" 1 Timothy 4:12.

But, what about someone like Saul who had ravaged the church in Jerusalem and rooted out Christians from house to house and had headed to Damascus to arrest any followers of Christ that he found? Ananias and the disciples there were well-aware of his reputation and were understandably wary of his conversion.

Saul's fruit, however, overcame his reputation. From persecutor to proclaimer, Saul soon proved himself by proving that Jesus is the Christ. Because he had confounded the very ones who had at first cheered his coming, the ones he had come to bind with ropes lowered him from the city wall by ropes to keep him from being killed.

An old adage asks, "If you were accused of being a Christian, would there be enough evidence to convict you?" This doesn't point to how you're sitting on the premises but standing on the promises. So, is there?
